JAMES F. BARNHORN,
PHYSICAL AND OCCUPATIONAL CHEMIST, and Professor of Chemistry in the American Academy and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

BOSTON, September 21, 1893.

Dear Sir: - The following are the analyses and reports of my investigations of the specimens of water which you are so good as to have sent me.

The first three waters, by the analysis of which you have been enabled to find out the nature and composition of the water, are of the same nature and composition as the water of the Jerusalem Spring, and are of the same nature and composition as the water of the Jerusalem Spring.

The second water, by the analysis of which you have been enabled to find out the nature and composition of the water, is of the same nature and composition as the water of the Jerusalem Spring, and is of the same nature and composition as the water of the Jerusalem Spring.

The third water, by the analysis of which you have been enabled to find out the nature and composition of the water, is of the same nature and composition as the water of the Jerusalem Spring, and is of the same nature and composition as the water of the Jerusalem Spring.

Very truly yours,
JAMES F. BARNHORN.
